DREADFUL ACCIDENTTO A LION .-- The Cleveland Plaindealer tells of a fearful accident in Van Amburgh's menagerie. Some of the new keeper's menager to torment the lion. Wishing to hear him roar, the brutes spit to-bacco juice in his eyes. This thoroughly maddened him and his frenzy was terrific. The lion made a tremendous dash against the cage bars—they gave way—he cleared the cage with a bound, and sprang for the affrighted wretch on the pole. In the blindness of his rage, the lion missed the man, striking his own head against the pole and plitting himself from head to tail! It was done as evenly as though he had been sawed by an experienced mechanic. The uproar brought Mr. Van Amburgh to the spot. The emergency required promptness. This was no time for reflection or argument. Seizing the cleaved parts of the lion, the great "tamer" clapped them instantly together. They stuck, and the lion was soon restored to consciousness. But imagine Van's agony when he saw that he had put the lion together in the wrong way! that two of the animal's legs were up and the other two were down! But the lion got well, and seems to enjoy himself better than ever. When he gets tired of walking on two legs he flops over on the other two. He is said to be a curious looking

TALLEYRAND'S RISE .- This is the account given by himself of the beginning of his rise after returning from America:

"When I arrived at Paris on my return to France, Madame de Stael was very anxious to serve me, and I was introduced by her to Barras, who gave me an invitation to his country house near Marly. I arrived there very early in the day, and was sitting there alone, when two young men entered the room, and began a discussion, saying, Shall we go or shall we not? At last they cried—"Allons!" and away they went. Not long afterwards there was a great distress in the House. They had gone to bathe in the Seine, and one of them, a natural son of Barras (Query) had been drowned. Barras was inconsolable, and all my endeavours to console him, such as they were (for I returned with him in his carriage to Paris,) were of no avail; but they gave him such an impression, in my favour, that he rendered me every service he could afterwards, and as long as be lived. He introduced me to Napoleon, and I came into office almost immediately. He always spoke of my kindness on that occasion with a warmth that affected me."-

TURNED TO STONE .- The Oxford (Miss.) Mercury of the loth inst., says: "The body of a young man named Searcy, who was buried four years ago on Hurricane Creek, Tishomingo county, Miss., was examined the other day and found to be partially petrified. The hands, arms, legs and thighs had turned to solid stone."
